Administrative Update

By Robert Holzweiss, President

I want to update you on several projects that the board of directors and the officers have been working on for the past several years. I am pleased to report that we have made substantial progress on the interrelated goals of stabilizing and strengthening our financial position, simplifying our membership renewal process, and repairing and strengthening the relationship between national and chapters while at the same time developing new initiatives.

Without question, the financial stability of the R&LHS is of paramount importance. Thanks to the work of outgoing Treasurer Mike Walker, R&LHS investment manager Corny Hauck and the extraordinary generosity of long-time member Bruce Ward; we are in excellent financial shape. As a result, the board agreed to expand Railroad History to 128 pages beginning with the last issue (#206) without increasing dues.

As you undoubtedly noticed last year, especially if you are a member of the Pacific Coast or Southern California Chapters, we made significant changes to the way dues are collected and the funds distributed to the chapters. With the support of the chapters and the diligent work of Membership Secretary Sigi Walker, we simplified the membership renewal process to the benefit of chapters, the national organization and most importantly, the membership.

The improved communication and cooperation between the chapters and the national organization also led the Mid-South Chapter to host our annual membership meeting this past May. As those who attended know, Marvin Clemons and his team put together an outstanding program. I hope Marvin and his colleagues will share their experience with other chapters who may consider hosting a future meeting.

Later this year we will kick off a ‘Friends of the R&LHS’ fundraising campaign on behalf of the Pacific Coast Chapter, Southern California Chapter and the Golden Spike Chapter who submitted restoration and preservation projects for your consideration. R&LHS members will be invited to contribute to one, two or all the projects as you see fit. All donations are fully tax deductible and 100% of the donations for each project will be forwarded to the chapters. Look for a letter in your mailbox after the first of September.

Two new initiatives are also moving forward albeit at different speeds. In early June an independent group of experts received the first five applications for the William D. Middleton and John H. White, Jr. Research Fellowships. The successful applicants will be notified after August 15th and announced in an upcoming issue of the Quarterly. Unfortunately, our grant program for the R&LHS archives did not begin as expected due to a scheduling conflict with the staff at the California State Railroad Museum. Last year, the CSRM staff began consolidating their vast holdings, including the R&LHS collection, into an enormous climate controlled storage space at a decommissioned Air Force base outside Sacramento. This massive task left little time for them to work with the R&LHS to establish hiring criteria for the archival intern. When the CSRM project is completed during 2013 we will again approach the CSRM staff about recruiting and supervising an archives graduate student to work on the R&LHS collection.

Beyond the management and program items mentioned above, the R&LHS board of directors is also changing with the departure of Parker Lamb, Keith Bryant and James Caballero at the expiration of their term. On behalf of the members of the R&LHS, I want to thank them for their many years of service and wish them well in their future endeavors. To fill their positions we welcomed John Gruber, the President of the Center for Railroad Photography & Art and Paul Ferber a professor of political science at the Rochester Institute of Technology. I thank them for committing their time and talents to the R&LHS and look forward to working with them as we continue to improve your membership experience.

Finally, on behalf of the directors and officers of the R&LHS I want to thank you, our members, for your continued support and encouragement. Your attendance at the annual meeting, support of our programs and contributions to our publications makes us the leading source for railroad history.
The railroad industry press has widely reported on the CSX renaissance of the last decade.

One of the best accounts is “CSX Spells Success” by Rush Loving, Jr. that appeared in the October 2011 issue of Trains magazine. The author credits CSX’s current chairman, president and chief executive officer, Michael Ward, and his management team for the railroad’s turnaround. Loving expanded on this theme in a presentation he made at the 2011 meeting of the Lexington Group in Transportation History. In it, he moved forward a story begun in his book The Men Who Loved Trains (winner of the R&LHS Hilton Book Award in 2007) which covered the trials and tribulations - and occasional triumphs - of railroading in the Northeast during the second half of the 20th century, including numerous missteps and missed opportunities by CSX under the leadership of John W. Snow from the mid-1980s until the turn of the century.

I agree with Loving’s assessment of CSX’s current leadership. However, having been an officer at the railroad during the period of John Snow’s ascendancy to the position of president and chief executive officer of CSX Transportation in 1987, and currently being an interested observer of the company from which I am collecting a pension, I’m moved to suggest some underlyiing reasons why I believe CSX got in trouble in the first place.

John W. Snow came to Chessie System, Inc. in 1977 as vice president-government affairs. Well educated in the law and economics and experienced in the ways of Washington, Snow was immediately put to work shepherding through Congress legislation that significantly deregulated the railroad industry. This was a major goal of Chessie System chairman Hays T. Watkins, who strongly believed that railroads could prosper in a free market environment. This was a major goal of Chessie System chairman Hays T. Watkins, who strongly believed that railroads could prosper in a free market environment. Snow performed his task brilliantly, and the deregulation initiative culminated with passage in 1980 of the Staggers Act. At the time, many railroad companies were still trying to rescue themselves from the hard times of the 1960s and ’70s through downsizing, mergers and diversification. One such effort was the creation of CSX Corporation in 1980 as a holding company for the Chessie System (B&O, C&O, WM) and Seaboard Coast Line Industries (SCL, L&N, Clinchfield and Georgia Railroad Group), followed, in time, by a diverse group of other transportation, energy, technology and property enterprises. Unfortunately, this was accompanied by a number of decisions and actions in the 1980s that seriously compromised the performance and competitive position of the railroad into the 21st century.

Hays Watkins had long felt that the typical railroad organization, dominated by the operating department with marketing playing second fiddle, was unhealthy, and stunted growth. Combining Chessie and Seaboard would simply create an even more monolithic operating department. Therefore, the managements and operations of the two systems were kept largely separate and encouraged to compete with one another, if not for traffic, then in terms of job performance. At times, this seemed a more important management objective than competing for business with the newly formed (1982) Norfolk Southern Corporation (Norfolk & Western Railway plus Southern Railway) or other transportation modes.

By the mid-1980s, it was clear that the Chessie and Seaboard railroads needed to be combined. But Watkins was still wary of an overbearing operating department. He was also concerned about... the inefficient utilization of many of the company’s assets, particularly the huge freight car fleet. This led to the unification of the railroads in 1986 with a unique three-unit or three-component organizational structure:

- CSX Distribution Services (marketing and sales; interface with customers)
- CSXRail Transport (train operations and maintenance of way)
- CSX Equipment (maintenance and repair of freight cars and locomotives; fleet utilization and productivity)

It was hoped this would force each unit to be managed efficiently in the manner of a stand-alone company or profit center, each with its own president. To quote Hays Watkins: “Using transfer pricing, the equipment people would rent equipment to the transportation unit who, in turn, would produce and sell the service to the marketing and sales organization”.

Although I was personally sympathetic with Watkins’ objectives, the plan was flawed in several respects:

- The headquarters of the three units were split between Baltimore and Jacksonville, with Distribution Services and Equipment in the former and Rail Transport in the latter. This tended to impede communication and cooperation.
- The concept was never enthusiastically embraced among the officers, especially in the Rail Transport Unit. And the transfer pricing system proved cumbersome and was soon largely discredited.
- A parent company of the three units, CSX Transportation, was formed in 1987 to address these and other problems.

Although the three-unit organization did achieve some success, especially in improved equipment productivity, most people assumed it would be fully dismantled upon Watkins retirement... and it was.

Although Hays Watkins believed railroads could survive and thrive in a free market, Rail Transport president (soon to be CSX Transportation president) John Snow, his close advisor John L. Sweeney, plus at least one or two officers within the CSX Corporation hierarchy questioned the viability of the railroad. Snow initiated a study of whether CSX Corporation should get out of the railroad business and, if so, how might this best be accomplished.

I was asked to coordinate this study. Prior to the 1986 unification of Chessie and Seaboard, I had been vice president-casualty prevention at Chessie (a similar department on Seaboard was called risk management). I now had the CSX Transportation title of vice president-research and analysis with some “catch-all” functions and a loosely defined organization, but the primary job of leading the study and doing so “under the radar”.

Given the problems still facing industry in the 1980 - even with the pricing freedoms and regulatory reforms of the Staggers Act - I don’t believe Snow should be faulted for questioning the long-term viability of the CSX’s railroad business, especially in light of the struggles the steel and auto industries - long major customers of the railroads - were having at the time. To Snow’s credit, he retained a Washington-wise and very capable member of West Virginia Senator Robert Byrd’s staff, Randal H. Ihara, to work with me and encouraged us to seek expertise from the full-spectrum of economic ideologies and interests. Our consensus: It was by no means a forgone conclusion that traffic capable of producing good... returns for railroads was in irreversible decline or that railroads were hopelessly non-competitive for this and other traffic. The railroads should to take full advantage of the Staggers Act. And, yes, management needed to learn how to grow the business instead of continuing the endless retrenchment and downsizing of the last two decades. There also had to be improved labor productivity and major investment in infrastructure.

Although Snow clearly had serious doubts about future, he kept an open mind through the study and eventually accepted its findings. In 1988, he became president and chief operating officer of CSX Corporation. That same year, the corporation announced it would undergo a restructuring to emphasize its core transportation business. In the years to follow, it shed most of its non rail-related businesses. In 1991, Snow succeeded Hays Watkins as chairman of CSX Corporation.

Another, admittedly less tangible, factor in the decline of CSX was John Snow’s management style. Although certainly competent in his areas of technical expertise and in the political arena, Snow, unlike Watkins, lacked a deep understanding of, and passion for the railroad business and railroaders. In fact, at times he seemed to purposely detach himself from the railroad scene. This, I feel, rendered him less effective as a manager and leader.

Between the years of Chessie vs. Seaboard “competition” (1980-1986), disruptive and inconclusive organization experimentation (1986-1990), and doubts about the future viability of CSX’s railroad (1986-1989) - plus other factors, such as constantly changing management teams and the costly and time-consuming CSX vs. NS fracas over the acquisition of Conrail - the railroad lost forward motion in vision, leadership and infrastructure investment.

Since Michael Ward succeeded John Snow in 2003, he and his management team have had their hands full, but they’ve achieved considerable success. However, the work is not done.

Through recent acquisitions, Lake Forest College’s Donnelley and Lee Library has become a significant resource for railroad research in Chicago, the nation’s railroad hub. The college’s rich archives are augmented by its partnership with the Center for Railroad Photography & Art, making Lake Forest an important source for historians.

The city of Lake Forest itself has railroad traditions, since it once was home to presidents of many of Chicago’s major railroads. The library is 31 miles north of the Loop on Metra’s North (Union Pacific, ex-C&NW) line. It is a short walk from the recently refurbished 1900 station, designed by Charles Frost and Alfred Granger, who lived in Lake Forest on the family compound of their father-in-law, Marvin Hughitt, long-time president of the Chicago & North Western.

The railroad collection is named for Elliott R. Donnelley (1904-75), a printing company executive and railfan who lived in Lake Forest. In addition to Donnelley, the holdings include material from Munson Paddock (1889-1970), Arthur D. Dubin (1923-2011), James Sloss (1910-88), and Donald Duke (1929-2010). The Center has material from Wallace Abbey, John Bjorklund (1939-2005), Sam Breck (1928-2009), and Ted Rose (1940-2002). The Center’s web archive, railroadheritage.org, has selections from both the Lake Forest and Center holdings.

The railroad collection has grown—sometimes with Donnelley family assistance—to include thousands of books, more than a hundred thousand photographs, more than five thousand time-tables, manuscripts, and more than a thousand brochures and ephemeral items such as lanterns, china, tickets, and fabric and paint samples, according to Arthur Miller (amiller@lakeforest.edu), archivist and librarian for special collections.

After his death, Donnelley’s family donated his railroad books and periodicals and made gifts to the library, which he had helped make possible as a member of the Lake Forest College Board of Trustees. Donnelley’s holdings emphasized preservation, narrow gauge, western railroads, live steam, and modeling. As it has developed, Special Collections has followed his collecting interests, augmented almost from the start by photography. Still during the 1970s, the Donnelley family encouraged another major addition of railroad material: books, periodicals, photographs, timetables, etc. from Paddock, an illustrator who lived in Wisconsin, New York City, and Pennsylvania. Paddock’s collection complemented Donnelley’s holdings from the late 1930s to the 1970s, the golden age of the railfan nostalgia and interest in America, when cars and planes gradually supplanted rail travel. Paddock’s collection dates back to the 1860s, with glass-plate negatives and prints by John Reid (1835-1911), Paterson, New Jersey, for locomotive builders, and early action photos by Frank W. Blauvelt (1850-1929), New York City. Paddock also had more than 1,000 photo views of locomotives typical of Railway and Locomotive Engineering of the early 1900s and Railroad magazine’s 1920s and 1930s collector’s exchange. Paddock’s notes contain names and addresses of some of his sources.

Since 1999 and the relationship (archival depository, host for annual photography conferences) with the Center for Railroad Photography & Art, that group’s interests have led collecting, as well.

R&LHS members will be most familiar with Dubin’s photographs and brochures on passenger cars and the lifestyle they represented, given and transferred to the library in three groups. From the late 1990s through the mid-2000s, Dubin, who then lived in nearby Highland Park, transferred 10,000 to 12,000 photographs—often examples of top quality railroad publicity views—from the era of the high-speed, express limited train, which thrived from the late nineteenth century to the 1960s. These images reflect the U.S. focus and make-up of Dubin’s books Some Classic Trains (1964) and More Classic Trains (1974). Miller took an unusual step, staying in contact with Dubin to better interpret his collection. He had Sayre Kos, when a student, interview Dubin and document his reasons for preserving what he did. The second and third Dubin groups, acquired gradually in various transfers during the 2000s, include his own photographs and purchased sets documenting Dubin’s international rail and ship travels from the 1980s and 1990s plus slides of his own travels, timetables, and brochures with commercial art. In the 1960s Dubin had helped save the Pullman

Arthur Dubin (1923-2011), with an architect’s eye for creativity, collected publicity photographs of well-designed interiors of passenger trains. The striking example here shows the Burlington’s Denver Zephyr observation car, photographed with models on October 10, 1940. Paul P. Cret (1876-1945), a leading U.S.—though French-born and Ecole educated—architect based at the University of Pennsylvania, created the Zephyr interiors. Lake Forest College, Dubin I.42.9
Company photographs and records, providing a source for his and other people's books. These were transferred to the library as well.

Many small groupings include materials about Cuba in the 1920s, then known as the Riviera of the Americans. Since Cuba did not have prohibition, parties on luxury Pullman trains traveling across the country were popular for wealthy Americans. Another group of photographs appears in the DVD version of Rising from the Rails: Pullman Porters and the Making of the Black Middle Class by Larry Tye. From Poole Brothers, one of Chicago’s three most important printing companies, originally a printer of transportation tickets and maps. Dubin was able to select brochures and other items before the Poole Brothers’ material was destroyed. The first group is listed and a version of this is available online and by contacting the library’s Special Collections. Other lists are in progress.

Not related to Dubin, but also important is a group of about 50 stereoviews from Utah of the building of the Pacific Railroad; another group of images from turn-of-the-century civil engineer Frank Anthony; and World War II and other photos from James Sloss and William Crosby, the latter an associate of Donnelley’s working on preserved Shay locomotives and participating in some of Donnelley’s legendary summer rail sojourns.

Together, the Dubin and Paddock collections offer a balance between an illustrator’s eye for the history of motive power and an architect’s eye for aesthetics, design, and luxury travel.

In the 1980s, Massachusetts Institute of Technology scholar James Sloss’s collections were donated, including eastern and international material, western railroad books, and 3,000 timetables.

Four hundred black and white 8 x10-inch glossy prints by California photographer Donald Duke show a broad spectrum of California scenery and Southern Pacific diesel freight trains. This collection was the gift of Norm Carlson, a Lake Forest based trans-
Railroad Resources at Lake Forest College

Portion consultant and president of the Shore Line Interurban Historical Society.

The book collections begin with English and American illustrated and monographic titles of the earliest days of railroading in the early nineteenth century. The later nineteenth century is represented by railroad-specific titles and series, such as Poor's Manual, and by more general travel books, which reflect the rise of rail passenger travel, especially in the West. Some volumes are illustrated by albumen prints, among the earliest photo-illustrated books. The most comprehensive treatment begins after World War II, reflecting Donnelley's and Sloss's collecting, as well as books purchased with Donnelley family funding and selected initially by John Allen, a planner with the Chicago area's Regional Transportation Authority. Examples illustrating the quality of the book collection make up a chapter (items 61-70) in One Hundred Rare and Notable Books (2004) (lakeforest.edu/library/archives/exhibits/onehundredbooks.php#railroads).

The periodical collection has early unbound (ads still present) issues of post-Civil-War American trade periodicals from Munson Paddock, who may have been associated with Angus Sinclair, a New York railroad publisher a century ago. In addition, there are runs of the standard rail history and railfan periodicals, most often also unbound to preserve their usefulness to modelers: Railroad Stories, Railroad Magazine, Trains, Railroad and Railfan, and Vintage Rails.

Miller praises the library’s association with the Center for Railroad Photography & Art. The Library considers the Center “a partner in promoting its railroad photographic holdings,” which the Center amplifies with materials it has acquired from nationally known railroad photographers and works of railroad art. The agreement notes, “through the Center’s efforts the College library’s collections have gained recognition as a nationally significant repository of railroad photography.” The Special Collections division processes and conserves collections, often with financial support generated by the Center, and cooperates with the Center in publication of all its railroad holdings.

Special Collections houses on deposit the Center’s photograph collections, most notably the Ted Rose archive, organized by Mattoon. Rose, best known for his watercolor paintings, as a youth traveled extensively in North America between 1956 and 1962, photographing the last of steam. The Wallace Abbey collection of photographs (55,000 black-and-white negatives, plus color slides), deposited in 2010, has been a 2011-12 project, partially funded through the Center by a preservation grant from Trains magazine. Abbey kept his camera with him as a journalism student at the University of Kansas, associate editor at Trains, and through a succession of progressively more responsible jobs in the railroad industry. The Railway & Locomotive Historical Society gave him a lifetime achievement award in photography in 2003. The already well-organized John F. Bjorklund slide collection (55,000 items in ninety-nine metal boxes) was deposited in 2011. Bjorklund started photography in the late 1960s and made it a point to cover the disappearing aspects of railroading.

In addition, the Center has smaller but important collections on deposit such as publicity photographs collected by photographer David Plowden as a teenager, and Sam Breck’s creative and unconventional photographs for calendars from 1985 to 1998 for Peaker Services, Inc., remanufacturers and maintainers of EMD diesel engines and locomotives in Michigan.

The College and Center are Internet savvy, so the best place to start your research is at their web sites: lakeforest.edu/library/archives/railroad/ for the special collections department or railphoto-art.org for the Center. Together they are a not to be overlooked source for historians.

R&LHS Member Wins Multiple Awards for Amtrak Film

By Peter A. Hansen

Editor’s Note: Peter A. Hansen is editor of Railroad History and has written five Luckin films.

Railway & Locomotive Historical Society member Richard W. Luckin has received several prestigious film industry awards for his 2011 documentary, Amtrak: The First 40 Years. In July, he learned that the film had won the Videographer Award, but it had previously been named winner of five other awards from various organizations that recognize excellence in corporate filmmaking and in television.

Such recognition is nothing new for Luckin, nor are railroad subjects. Previous films include America and the Passenger Train; Dome Car Magic; Super Chief: Speed, Style, Service and Daylight: The Most Beautiful Train in the World. His stable of top-flight voiceover talent includes Michael Gross (TV’s Family Ties), Edward Herrmann of The History Channel, and Tia Marlier of HGT V. Luckin’s programs are often seen on PBS stations nationwide, and they have garnered a total of 45 awards. His name may also be familiar to R&LHS members from his massive 1983 book, Dining on Rails: An Encyclopedia of Railroad China. It’s still considered the standard reference on the subject.

Luckin is modest about his achievements, but he has a strong creative vision. “While my films will not change the world or make it a better place,” he says, “I feel that my mission has always been to capture and preserve American rail history through stories about our passenger trains. Rather than producing railfan programs, I have chosen to produce documentaries that always include people who were involved with the trains as passengers and crew. Their memories and experiences are legitimate primary sources, and they’re just as important to the historical record as written documents. I’m getting their stories now, while these people are still around to tell them.”

Luckin also sees his films as a way to introduce railroad history to new audiences. “Railroad programs always do well, ratings-wise, on PBS. I feel I can reach more people through television, and my objective is to reach the largest audience possible. Television is that medium.”

Apart from a good sense of what he’s about, Luckin also credits the people around him for his success. Voice-over talent and on-camera hosts are an obvious part of that, but he also speaks highly of his cameramen, writers, and editors. Working with such pros, he’s not afraid to ask them, “What do you think? Is this working?” While there’s no doubt of the expertise he brings to his craft, he’s also very intuitive in his approach: If he has a hunch about something, pro or con, he’ll seek the input of people around him.

“I’m not making the program for me,” he says, “but for the viewer. What would they like to know? And how can I tell it best?”
Outgoing Treasurer's Two Bits

By Mike Walker

After seven years serving as R&LHS Treasurer, I stepped down from the position as of the 2012 Annual Meeting in Birmingham. Paul Gibson has now assumed the position. As I have mentioned at Board meetings, the work of the treasurer has become more complex and diverse over the years. This means that the transition will take time, with some functions transferring quickly and others more slowly.

My primary focus going forward will be to continue to assist the membership secretary with financial matters related to processing new and renewing memberships, particularly those using credit card payment, and recruiting new members at train shows. I will also continue as a director of the society and a member of the Finance Committee.

From this point forward, please send all invoices, documents, letters, etc. for financial matters related to Railroad History, the Quarterly Newsletter, Archives Services, and Awards to Paul Gibson, Treasurer, 161 Gilmore Rd, Wrentham MA 02093-1227. For questions, contact Paul at 508-397-1828 (cell), 508-384-6111 (fax) or paul@railpub.com (email).

It has been my pleasure, as well as a rewarding experience, to serve the society as your treasurer. Prior to that, I had first been R&LHS Assistant Secretary and then Secretary from 1997 to 2005. I cannot step down, however, without expressing my gratitude to Charlie Zlatkovich for his guidance during the transfer of the treasurer’s duties to me when he became R&LHS president. He had served as treasurer from 1982 to 2005, having set up the financial structure of the R&LHS at the request of then president Howard F. Greene, who took over from Charles Fisher.

Track Bulletins

The new Center for Railway Tourism at Davis & Elkins College has an interesting website. The looong URL is http://campaign.r20.constantcontact.com/render?llr=ylf4jmicab&vu-001CjuWeGGrH49eukDNQwW62yfKNIH3gs5CEnKwPOyx-2We5yZ6tyBigojfiremcOZKW7UeFYy7AmY51FnVkeRSxDrwnuWdltTFBznHwVFs4hA8s8dMD1JZzdhy9YePL8MPK

It’s easier to go to http://www.dewv.edu/ and search on Railway Tourism (and worth the effort).
New member recruiting at train shows and railroad related events has continued strong this Spring. Various R&LHS members participated at eleven events, signing up three dozen new members. Through June, the total new member count for 2012 is 90! Here’s what’s been happening over the last few months:

Additionally, Ken Miller represented the R&LHS at the “Conrail Days” event at the Pennsylvania State RR Museum in May.

And here’s a list of upcoming shows scheduled over the next few months. Some still need a crew of two or three members to staff the table at these shows. If you live in the area, and would like to help with this effort, here’s your chance!

Just send me an email or give me a call, and we’ll get you set up and running!

And finally, here are a few more opportunities coming up this Spring and early Summer. Can you help out with any of these? Please contact me, or any of the team leaders listed, to find out more.
TWELVE WAYS TO KILL AN ASSOCIATION

1. Don't ever come to meetings.
2. If you come, come late.
3. NEVER accept an office --- it is easier to CRITICIZE than DO.
4. If asked by the chairman to give your opinion regarding some important matter, tell her you have nothing to say ... AFTERWARDS tell everyone how things ought to have been done.
5. Do no more than is absolutely necessary, but when other members roll up their sleeves and willingly use their abilities to help things along, HOWL THAT THE ASSOCIATION IS RUN BY A CLIQUE.
6. Hold back your dues as long a possible.
7. If you don't receive a bill for your dues, don't pay.
8. If you do receive a bill for your dues after you've paid, RE-SIGN.
9. If you receive service without joining, don't think of joining.
10. When you attend a meeting, vote to do something; then go home and do just the opposite.
11. Agree to everything said at the meeting and disagree with it outside.
12. When asked for information or help, don't give it.

Electronic Quarterly Newsletter . . .
Did you know you can sign up to receive your Quarterly Newsletter as a digital file (PDF)? There are several advantages: (1) you'll receive your copy before your friends' mailed copies arrive; (2) you can share your QNL with friends and relatives - either for discussion purposes or to persuade them to join the R&LHS; and (3) you can save trees, ink, postage - and R&LHS costs. The process is simple: Email me at mikensigi@comcast.net. I will then send you a PDF file of the latest QNL to make sure your inbox can accommodate a large file. If the email does not bounce, I will add you to the “EQNL” address list.

Life Members . . .
Don't forget to let me know when you change your address. Providing me a phone number so I can contact you if your mail is returned would be very helpful (or an email address)!

Thanks to all who updated mailing addresses, phone numbers, and emails!!!
